

Abstract

Directional dissipation of photons from a linear chain of atoms is observed under the influence of incident laser. Dipole-Dipole interaction between atoms is reason behind coherence and collective shift in energy of atomic states. By using quantum correlation functions and density matrix approach bunching and anti-bunching of emitted photons is observed. The properties of non-classical light are observed at far distance detectors.