

ABSTRACT

The establishment of Canal Colonisation created a drastic change in Punjab which started a new era of development. This project made Punjab as the center of focus for the whole India. In this research, Chunian Canal Colony is discussed as the case study. It is very important topic as it contributed in the existing research of Punjab Canal Colonisation which was generally ignored by the researchers. This study tries to analyze the geo-political and socio-economic significance of this region. Moreover, it also struggled to find out its impacts on the inhabitants of this colony. Primary sources especially archival material is the base of this research. Field research and interviews were also conducted to get more meaningful information. The importance of this colony can be realized by its enormous impacts which it made. The Process of colonisation makes the people blissful. They lived with religious harmony among each other. They were comparatively educated and economically prosperous because of the well-established market and better communication system.