

Abstract

“Such depends upon pervious preparation and without such a preparation there is sure to be failure”

The issues related to the political development of government entities located in the Asian and, more precisely, South Asian region is the focus of today’s historians, political scientists, sociologists, social scientists, and other scholars. The main objective of this study is to identify the general and particular features in the political development of the western regions of two Asian republics – China and Pakistan. In modern era, the economic features of the world have been changed and now directly related to political development of any society or state. The leading factors of this reconstruction are trade liberalization, communication advancement, infrastructural development and advancement in cross border supply-transform system etc. Against this backdrop, the Chinese government initiated a grand connectivity plan i.e., Belt and Road Initiative (BRI) and put emphasis on the development of its western autonomous region of Xinjian to counter the ethnic tension. BRI is a developmental strategy of China to ventilate the grievances of its underdeveloped areas.

Similarly, the state of Pakistan is facing severe repercussions due to underdevelopment of Balochistan. Moreover, various actors are involved in augmenting backwardness of Balochistan from the day one. Chinese BRI is also an asset for Pakistan’s backward region of Balochistan. China Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC) under BRI is a multibillion dollars bilateral trade project between rising China with Pakistan is a debatable topic particularly with the reference of Balochistan as it would be the epicenter of this project having Gwadar seaport on its territory. For Pakistan the CPEC is truly being called the Game Changer. For our leader this is the golden right set of circumstances to attain devoted fantasy of making Pakistan an “Asian Tiger”. It will be the gamer changer for the globe not only for the region. In other words by modernizing the societies and nations, stability, integration and economic development must first be ensured and that would in turn ensure political development.
