

Abstract

All over the world, women are not less than men. They can do everything which men can do and they have demonstrated this fact throughout the history. We are all equal and everyone should have equal rights. These include the right to life, right to property, and right to education. But in the present times, gender discrimination is common. Due to this, women don't have equal rights. Gender discrimination also implies that women are less than men. Due to gender discrimination men have misused them, they ignore them and they cannot give equal rights properly. Gender discrimination is found in all fields and societies across the globe. This research studies the education problems faced by the rural girls of Sargodha. It contains the interviews of 13 rural women centered around their personal, social, cultural, political, and economic problems. The findings from these interviews have been compiled and, in the conclusion, practical recommendations have been presented to curb these problems. This will help the future studies on the subject in other areas of Pakistan and South Asia as well.
